

The Centre for Feminist Social Studies (CFS) invites to a seminar on

Women's peace building: challenges and possibilities

The seminar features a dialogue on gender perspectives, human rights, war and women's agency in peacebuilding processes. The two presenters, Annette Lyth and Sanela Bajramovic will deliberate on field experiences and research results and discuss possibilities and challenges in the work for peace, human rights and equality in the future, and new research agendas.

Thursday 22 October 13.00-14.30 in F2240

The seminar will be held in English

Sanela Bajramovic, is a historian and lecturer in educational sciences at Örebro University. She has investigated gender perspectives on war and peace from a historicizing perspective, and the role of transnational women's organizations in building peace.

Annette Lyth is a legal scholar in international human rights and humanitarian law, and incoming Director of Swedwatch. She has three decades of experience with the UN and international organisations, including OHCHR, UNICEF, UNDP and the OSCE, with field assignments in Rwanda, the Balkans, Nepal, Southeast Asia and Afghanistan. She served with the UN in Rwanda in the aftermath of the 1994 genocide and with the OSCE mission in Bosnia during the Balkan wars. Her most recent UN post was Head of Field Office for the UN Assistance Mission in Afghanistan (UNAMA).
